HOW LONG HAVE YOU BEEN WRITING FOR WOLTERS KLUWER?

I started writing for Wolters Kluwer (then COJ) in 1998 when I was pregnant with my first child. I spent the last couple of weeks of my pregnancy in hospital. The nurses thought I was weird, but my obstetrician was very pleased that I had those big black books and pages of copied cases and handwritten notes with post-it notes everywhere so I was meant to stay in bed. I felt a degree of ownership over what I had written and wanted to make sure it stayed up-to-date - over time, my updates have become more regular and gradually covered more topics.

WHAT DO YOU LIKE MOST ABOUT WRITING FOR WOLTERS KLUWER?

I like learning and I like helping other people to learn. You can't write about something unless you understand it yourself. I get excited about new and interesting cases. I like being up-to-date and being confident when able to tell a client about a new case or other developments in the law. However, I have also enjoyed developing personal relationships with the Wolters Kluwer editors.

WHAT INSPIRES YOU TO WRITE?

Sometimes I am inspired to write by a new and interesting case or a development in the law - like Stanford, the haunted house article and the negative article. Sometimes I am asked to speak about a particular topic to present on, and I become interested and develop a topic, theme or theory. Some of the papers on the Wolters Kluwer Central blog have developed in these ways and then go into the commentary.
